

Final Presentation Spec

May 2023
I2 Research Project Bootcamp

The time has come! I hope that by now you have a much deeper grasp of a particular area of machine learning, neuroscience, computer science, or any combination of fields. I hope that you have found time to reflect on what makes research important to you and how you might envision what you create shaping the future. I hope being around people who are trying to do the same has helped you achieve this and has been able to inspire you in some way. This final presentation should wrap up your efforts, including what you have learned about your subfield, what your particular research question is, the details of how you would plan to implement it, the impacts this research would have, and future directions. A skeleton of template slides has even been made for you on Canva here: Template Slides, though feel free to add much more than the template includes!

You should incorporate the aspects of your final research proposal from Module 4, as it should be helpful.
